

N75

Jun 2003

Shutterbug
June 2003

In this review by Peter Burian, he found the Nikon N75 to be a camera for photo enthusiasts that want a camera that is easy to use, yet has advanced features. He was impressed with the many exposure control options that the camera offers, as well as the 25-segment Matrix Metering system, tracking focus and Lock-On options. Burian stated, "The Nikon N75 includes enough capabilities to satisfy the experienced photographer."

Petersen's Photographic
June 2003

In this N75 review by the editor's of Petersen's Photographic they found the camera to have features and quality that are of interest to photo enthusiasts. The N75 has a wide array of exposure options, 12 custom functions that lets you tailor the camera to your taste, as well as having easily accessible controls. The editors said "We found the N75 very intuitive and easy to figure out and use. The camera is very compact and feels good in the hands."

Popular Photography
June 2003

In this review of the N75, Herbert Keppler found the camera to produce bright images, and described it as an "advanced amateur" camera. Keppler was impressed with the focus area selector switch and found the AF sensors to be "impressive" and "worked admirably." Keppler found the camera to be lightweight, and was impressed with the design.